Payne County member appointed to serve on AFBF YF&R committee

Rachel Pickens of Payne County Farm Bureau recently was selected to serve on the American Farm Bureau Federation Young Farmers and Ranchers Committee.

The committee helps evaluate and update the YF&R long-term plan, assists with executing YF&R competitive events at the AFBF Annual Convention, provides programming advice for the AFBF YF&R Leadership Conference, serves on one of four subcommittees, serves as a contact for state YF&R programs, and takes part in numerous committee meetings.

“Through her involvement in Farm Bureau, our state and her local community, Rachel has demonstrated a passion for sharing the story of agriculture and our organization,” said Rodd Moesel, Oklahoma Farm Bureau president. “She works tirelessly to develop her own leadership skills while taking the time to commit herself to helping others grow as well.”

The Stillwater resident has been involved in Farm Bureau in a number of capacities, serving as Payne County Farm Bureau YF&R vice chairman and on the Oklahoma Farm Bureau YF&R Committee, as well as competing on the national level in the AFBF YF&R Discussion meet and Excellence in Agriculture events.

“Being appointed to the AFBF YF&R Committee is an honor which I believe should not be taken lightly,” Pickens said. “With this honor comes the expectation to achieve a greater good for the organization and its members when considering long term and visionary goals.

“I hope to serve the organization by helping future members across the country transition from 4-H and FFA into the YF&R program, assisting in providing resources for YF&R members in developing their operations, utilizing younger members to lead our organization with marketing, communication and public awareness.”

Also known as the “Oklahoma Land Lady,” Pickens began her career in college as the auction coordinator of Pickens Auctions, marketing and selling more than 30,000 acres, and showcasing premier properties and pristine ranches. She currently lives on a ranch in Stillwater, Oklahoma, where she owns Rockin’ Star Farm, an agritourism venue.

In addition to her Farm Bureau involvement, Pickens is an active member of the Oklahoma Cattlemen’s Association, the National Cattlewomen’s Association, the Diamond Hats Club, the Oklahoma Agritourism Association and the National

Legislative Update: The second special session and beyond

By LeeAnna McNally, OKFB Public Policy

The second special session of the Oklahoma Legislature is officially underway, as legislators again returned to the state Capitol on Monday, Dec. 18.

Three days prior to the session, Gov. Mary Fallin issued an Executive Order calling legislators to address funding issues for the Oklahoma Health Care Authority and the Department of Health and Human Services.

Of course, this action comes after her Nov. 17 partial veto of the budget bill passed during the first special session. Fallin, in her veto message, emphasized a need for a permanent revenue solution.

However, the partial veto left many rural Oklahomans questioning the substantial diversion of funds from the County Improvements for Roads and Bridges program. Monies continue to be drawn from this fund to supplement other budgetary items, which could mean delayed infrastructure projects across the state.

After her partial veto in November, Fallin issued three Executive Orders aimed at government efficiency. Two of the orders dealt with administrative consolidation for higher education and public school districts while the third addressed government agencies to cut spending on "swag" items such as coffee cups and bumper stickers.

As we look toward the 2018 legislative session – a little over six weeks away – please be in contact with your legislators about the importance of protecting Oklahoma farmers and ranchers on issues such as the agriculture sales tax exemption, private property rights and property taxes.

A number of bills have been introduced to expand the scope of ad valorem taxes. Keeping ad valorem taxes low for farmers and ranchers – our state's second leading economic driver – is a cornerstone Farm Bureau issue.

As always, we diligently will fight to protect our grassroots farm and ranch members who produce food and fiber for the world.
