Right: In a current photo, the calf OSU veterinary students nicknamed Norman gets a scratch from its primary physician, Dr. John Gilliam, a resident in the large animal clinic at OSU's Boren Veterinary Medical Teaching Hospital. Calves born more than two weeks premature rarely survive, but under the care of the teaching hospital doctors, technical staff and students, the purebred Hereford overcame numerous ailments resulting from its being born two months early.

every day the calf got a little better. We didn't expect him to live, but we thought we'd give it a try."

Gilliam said Shockley's commitment to saving the calf made for an extremely rare opportunity for more than 50 veterinary medicine students to learn about neonatal care. Typically, such intensive care for a food animal is cost prohibitive.

"To treat Norman we had to borrow equipment normally used in the care of patients in the equine and small animal clinics of the teaching hospital," Gilliam said. "Combined efforts throughout the teaching hospital of several doctors, many students and our technical staff made this case successful, but only because of the investment and commitment of the owner were we able to do it."

"We're grateful to the owner because this was an outstanding opportunity for upwards of 50 students on rotations, and maybe more, to learn how to evaluate blood work and radiographs and make decisions about changing medications and therapies on a daily basis to adjust to an animal's changing conditions," Gilliam said. "And more importantly, we've learned from this case that it's possible for a calf to be born this prematurely and survive."

Norman's addition to the annals of veterinary medical journals remains to be seen, but the calf is already famous.

"Everybody in town we know is dying to see him," Shockley said. "We'll continue to keep him tame and break him to lead, and he's out of a great sire so he may even become a show animal someday."

Short-term business financing options

Ask business owners "What is the major limiting factor for small business?" and the answer will most likely be money. Whether it is for inventory, payroll, purchasing equipment, expansion or paying taxes, businesses require capital on hand.

Working capital can be difficult for any business to maintain. With so many potential expenses straining your cash flow, securing short-term financing can allow businesses to survive and flourish in times of financial pressure according to the United States Small Business Administration (SBA).

The SBA suggests that business owners have a short-term financing solution in the event that sales suddenly decrease, seasonal trends adversely affect a business, new equipment needs to be purchased or if a major cash expenditure arises. Popular short-term financing solutions can include short-term loans, collateral borrowing and business lines of credit.

Short-term loans usually require repayment within 60 to 90 days. Loans can be renewed, in whole or in part, on the due date, provided that the borrower has lived up to the obligations of the original agreement and the business continues to be a favorable lending risk.

With collateral borrowing, the borrower pledges certain assets as collateral to protect the lender in case of default on the loan or failure of the business. If the business defaults on the loan through failure to meet interest obligations or principal repayments, the lender assumes ownership of the collateral.

Lines of credit provide a business access to capital with a maximum borrowing amount

Clarks join emerging leaders at CHS New Leader Institute

Alfalfa County Farm Bureau members Steve and Mindi Clark of Byron recently attended the CHS New Leader Institute in Minneapolis, Minn., to learn how their involvement in their cooperative and community can help advance agriculture and strengthen rural America.

The Clarks represented Burlington Cooperative Association, Burlington, at the CHS New Leader Institute, held in conjunction with the regional cooperative's annual meeting Dec. 29. The Clarks were among more than 100 participants from 15 states and one Canadian province who attended the institute. The program's goal is to build leadership skills in individuals who show promise as future leaders in their rural communities.

During the four-day institute participants examined in-depth issues and challenges facing cooperatives, agriculture and rural America.

Participants heard from three leading authorities on agriculture and cooperatives during Institute workshop sessions. Presenters included Mark Mayfield, former National FFA president, who discussed leadership in the cooperative and community. Dr. Barry Flinchbaugh, Kansas State University, reviewed leadership roles in the global marketplace. In addition, Jim Whitt, Professional Speakers Network, shared how to succeed in today's agricultural industry.

CHS Inc. is a diversified energy, grains and foods company committed to providing the essential resources that enrich lives. The Fortune 500 company is owned by farmers, ranchers and cooperatives, and provides products and services ranging from grain marketing to food processing.
